WHO expects to continue to see sporadic cases. It is still early days, with remaining questions on the source of the infection, its reservoir, mode of transmission and the best way to control the outbreak in animals.

As of 29 April, a total 126 total cases have been reported (125 from China's National Health and Family Planning Commission, and 1 from Taipei CDC). Of these patients, 24 have died and 24 were discharged from hospital.

WHO’s risk assessment, or view of the situation, remains the same because the virus does not seem to pass easily between people, if at all.
